Fund Manager's Commentary

The past month, whilst devoid of headline "events" to match those of the previous few months, enjoyed no less volatility in capital markets. Of significant interest though have been the widespread comments from company managements about the abrupt slowdown in activity experienced in October. Encouragingly this is, at last, the economic manifestation of the credit starvation that began with the sub-prime collapse to which the substantial declines capital markets have been pointing. Once wearied investors throw in the towel, the opportunities already available should provide attractive returns for those who stay the course.
